

The primary material of an HTML document is enclosed by the <body> element. It serves as a container for all of the content that is accessible to users when they access a website. The <head> element comes before the <body> element, which is a child of the <html> element.